GIN

Gin's roots date back to 16th century Holland, with each type reflecting the era it was produced in. The 5 different styles of Gin are: London Dry, Plymouth, Genever, Old Tom and International style. (30ML)

- London Dry is dry, juniper flavored, light in body, and aromatic.
- Plymouth is less dry, earthier, with softer juniper notes.
- Genever differs from other gins in its malt grains, which give it a darker hue and flavour similar to a light bodied whiskey.
- Old Tom is a sweeter style of Gin, often used in the classic Tom Collins.
- International Style Gin refers to new styles of gin that use the same base distilling process but are predominately infused with flavours, not juniper berries.

WORLD WHISKEY/WHISKY

This is a category that cannot be defined. Unlike Scotland, Ireland or America, these come from countries without a strong history of whisky production, therefore the laws regarding their production vary. These whiskies are unpredictable, which is what make them so interesting.

SCOTCH WHISKY

To be considered a single malt scotch, whisky must come from a single distillery, made from malted barley. From here the liquid must age for a minimum of three years in oak casks before being bottled. (30ML)

Highlands

Whisky from this region is difficult to generalise in flavour as the region is large and there are four distinct sub-regions; North, West, East and South. Each displays different flavour profiles ranging from sweet to dry.

Speyside

Once considered part of the Highlands, this area has almost half the number of distilleries in Scotland. Whisky from this region tends to be sweeter, with mellow notes and fruity flavors.

Islay

The Island of Islay (pronounced 'Eye-La') produce whiskies renowned for their dryness and strong peaty smokiness.

Lowlands

Whiskies from this region tend to have a dry finish, which makes for perfect aperitifs. They are light and delicate with grassy notes and delicate aromas.

Islands

Each island carries its own characters, although usually a slight salinity can be found, thanks to the sea vicinity. Some islands will often have a more volcanic character (Talisker), others will have more of a honey and smoky malt (Highland Park) or a malty and rich character (Arran). (30ML)

BLENDED SCOTCH

Blended scotch whisky is the combination of malt and grain whiskies, matured for at least 3 years in oak. Roughly 90% of all scotch produced today goes into making blends. Flavor profile can vary as House's have their own unique style; Johnnie Walker produce rich and complex scotch while Dewar's produce a more sweeter and honeyed scotch. (30ML)

IRISH WHISKEY

The Irish are credited with being the first to distill whiskey, although this may become a heated debate with the Scots. Whiskey coming from Ireland may be single malt, grain, blended or pure pot still. Peat is rarely used in the malting process, so that the whiskey has a smoother finish as opposed to the smoky and earthy flavors common to some Scotch whisky. (30ML)

JAPANESE WHISKY

Whisky has been a very important part of Japanese culture and it's largely attributed to its two founding fathers: Shinjiro Torii and Masataka Taketsuru. When tasting some of these spirits, they can tend to lie between Lowland and Speyside in style. Delicate and perfumed with honeyed sweetness but some display a little peat like in the hakushu peated expression. (30ML)

TEQUILA

Produced from the blue agave plant, Tequila can only be made in Mexico and only in one of five states. Tequila comes from the Highlands or Lowlands of Mexico. Highland agave plants are bigger and richer with a longer growing cycle producing a fruitier style with floral hints. Agave plants from the Lowlands have a shorter growing cycle with a more earthy and herbaceous flavor, and are sometimes spicier. (30ML)

MEZCAL & SOTOL

Mezcal is one of Mexico's native spirits still made in a traditional manner. It mainly comes from the state of Oaxaca, but can also be produced in eight other regions. Several types of agave are used in the production and distillation of Mezcal. The smokey and earthy flavours of Mezcal come from the harvested pina's being cooked underground for 2-3 days.
